

There are bosses whose expertise is to grab the credit away from the people who work the hardest and then leave his or her people unappreciated. Have you ever had such a boss in your past employment life? How did you deal with the situation?

I am spilling the beans unofficially that well-known inspirational speaker, author, and trainer Francis Kong has accepted my invitation to come to Zamboanga City again. He has been here several times in the past. A personality that I admire for more than a decade, Francis has been my mentor and a good friend. He has that aura that influence over his audience to be godly and to do things right for your family, workplace, and for God.

Sharing today in Pep Talk are some of his inputs that he posted in his Facebook account. Wait for the details of his upcoming event before the year ends in Zamboanga City.

Words of wisdom from Francis Kong:

“I have dealt with different kinds of personality whether in business or in the academe. From the wealthy and the powerful to the lowly and the humble and here is my finding: Everybody is vulnerable to hurt and pains. Some cope with it well, others disguise it better but every person hurts. This is why we need to be kind to everyone no matter what their social status is. A small act of kindness leaves a big impact and may heal a hurting soul.”

Somebody says: "A new idea is delicate. It can be killed by a sneer or a yawn, stabbed to death by a quip, or worried to death by a frown." So do not be discouraged easily. Present your case very well but also be open to suggestions and criticism.

“Many fathers messed up in their lives before but now they are all fixed up. When I see broken families restored, relationships healed, sins forgiven. This comes to mind CS Lewis: "God loves us not because we are good. But that God will make us good because He loves us. Just as the roof of the greenhouse does not attack the sun because it is bright, but becomes bright because the sun shines on it.”
